This text is intended to cover what is needed in the Advanced Placement curriculum, covering more topics than a typical college-prep class, and it is adaptable for the honors classroom. The program is designed to encourage readers to take an active role in shaping governmental policy. There is one chapter for Congress and one for the Presidency, as opposed to two or three in traditional texts. This makes it better suited for shorter-term classes. There are Internet resources and a section called Get Connected at the end of each chapter to help integrate technology into the classroom. Another section called Issues of the Times has "The Issue" and "Read All About It," describing a current issue and a New York Times article about the issue with a series of questions in "Think About It."
